

Representation of Plaintiffs in Kerr v. Hickenlooper, now Kerr v. Polis

The law firms of Dentons US LLP (formerly) McKenna Long & Aldridge LLP, Brownstein Farber Hyatt Schreck LLP, and Covington & Burling LLP have for several years represented the individual and governmental plaintiffs in Kerr v. Polis on a pro bono (no fee) basis because of their shared commitment to the public service obligation of members of the legal profession. Each of the law firms has a record of pro bono activities in behalf of important public issues and of indigent clients. The management of each firm determined that the question of the constitutionality of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights (TABOR) amendment to the Colorado Constitution presented an important issue that warranted the donation of their legal services to the case.
